May 2024: Former senior curator, Andrew Grant, reminds us in 2024, of the development of the new Powerhouse Museum in the 1980s, that 'The exhibition project teams were all in place by April 1985, less than 3 years before opening in March 1988. Where's the planning at now, for reopening in less than 3 years?'

Museum of Applied Arts and Sciences: Progress Review 1984

In 'Overview Group Report', in the MAAS Progress Review, Oct.1984 (p7), Director Lindsay Sharp writes about the planning of major themes for the new Powerhouse Museum site of the MAAS, completed by 1984, as a core task associated with architectural plans.

'In August 1984 a Project Director was appointed to be responsible for co-ordination of the designs and development of the exhibits, co-ordination with the Public Works Department on Stage II building renovation and all related matters. Thematic guidelines are already devised for the exhibitions to be installed in the completed Power House. These guidelines provide a clear grouping of exhibitions, describe the linkages between individual and group exhibitions and define the aims and objectives of the displays.'
